UPPER EAST SIDE $7.2 million

The location of this three-bedroom, 4½-bathroom co-op, in a “white-glove” building on Park Avenue at 67th Street, can’t get any better, and this postwar home has as much to offer as any prewar classic in the neighborhood, if not more. Wraparound terraces present “glorious” 360-degree views of the cityscape and Central Park. Inside, the “triple-sized” master suite alone should keep you content, with a “room-sized” walk-in closet, an en-suite bath with double sinks, a small home gym and access to the east terrace. Other “generously sized” rooms include a corner living room, formal dining room, library/media room and separate home office/study — with a sound system and built-in home security system throughout.
